Dear Rich:

I have been meaning to write and let you know how pleased we are with the many projects your firm is handling for us. Our direct mail projects are extremely "time-sensitive," yet you have succeeded in hitting each drop date we requested.

This level of service speaks well of you and your organization. This is especially true, when you consider that our mailings are diverse in scope and nature, often requiring numerous considerations. Further, the ability of your operation to successfully juggle projects for us, while maintaining the piece's quality and integrity, is worthy of praise.

As with any organization, the confidentiality of our information is paramount to our future viability. This issue was a significant concern, when we were considering a change in our primary direct mail. I am pleased to advise you that my mind is at ease, as we look to have a successful close to this year's Annual Appeal.

Kindest Regards,
